The Round Table: A Format for Aim-Oriented Discussion

For the past three years, the round table has been the model of choice for the various debates on cultural and social topics at Goethe-Institut Nigeria. Its characteristics are short individual speeches, a very limited amount of protocol, fair but strict moderation and consequent aim-orientation. Lead discussants as well as members of the audience get to enter the debate, while extensive digressions will not be tolerated. By now, it is time to evaluate the round table itself: did it fulfil the set objectives or is there still room to improve this format?
